MORGAN DEFENDS 'FAVORED' LISTS

Business Worth, Not Political Power Determined Choice, J. P. Claims.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—(P)—J. P. Morgan, in a final statement, as senate investigators closed their inquiry into his firm, today defended the practice of selling stocks to selected lists of clients.

The financier criticized publication of the lists of clients of his firm, saying it had brought "unjust criticism" upon the customers.

Referring to the special lists, the banker, in his prepared statement said:

"Our lists of private subscribers were naturally composed of men of affairs and position; but they were selected because of established business and personal relations, and not because of any actual or potential political relations.

"We never have had occasion to ask for favors from legislators or persons in public office, nor have we ever done so. We conduct our business through no means or means or 'influence' of favor. We rely upon such confidence as our clients and the business community generally may repose in us.

"The time is true of our loans to personal clients. It has never before been considered wrong to borrow money or to lend it. Our loans were to men of high standing and ample security.

The unprecedented depreciation in securities which has since occurred has caused certain of the borrowers heavy losses against which we have created ample reserves.

"It seems extraordinary that, after 70 years devoted to building up a good will which has made it true that our clients are men of affairs and of leadership, we should be taken to task for perfectly sound, honorable and straight-forward business transactions with them, simply because chance has brought some of them into high offices and mischance has impaired the fortunes of others."

It has never, during the firm's existence, been thought creditable to be a customer of J. P. Morgan & Company, whether a depositor, borrower or subscriber. We protested vigorously against the breach of what we have always assumed to be the confidential relationship of the banker and his customer. The result of this action has been an unwarranted criticism upon our customers. This unjust criticism we feel deeply.

At the close of Morgan's statement the senate investigators closed the current inquiry into operations of the Morgan Company, after hearings lasting for three weeks.

MORGAN PARTNERS TELL OF SALES

made in a sparsely-filled, oppressively hot hearing room in which J. P. Morgan sat as uncomfortable as everybody else, described how 343,750 shares were sold to Morgan partners and their families at $47.50 a share. Then 56,200 shares were sold to a "select list" of outsiders at $57.50.

10 Per Cent Profit.

He said these purchases were told Morgan & Company was taking a 10 per cent profit. Some of the higher priced buyers included Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, then Anne Morrow, whose father, the late Senator Dwight Morgan, once was a partner in the Morgan firm.

Others included Charles D. Hilles, Charles E. Mitchell and Alfred P. Sloan.

Stanley was one of the last witnesses. Pecora asked him about a sale to his wife in November, 1929, of 600 shares of Porto Rican American Tobacco Co.

Stanley said he made the sale for $10,532 and that it represented a loss of $12,855 which was claimed and allowed as an income tax deduction.

"Did you repurchase this stock from your wife?" Pecora asked.

"No," Stanley said.

Pecora estimated that Thomas S. Lamont's additional income tax for 1930 would have been $20,000 if his stock losses had not been employed but Lamont didn't think "it could possibly have been so much."

$654,000 Received.

Briefly, Ewing and his wife were described as having received $654,000 as security for 4,350 shares of Johns-Manville stock they had loaned to the trust account of their children. The stock was borrowed by the trust account to meet a short sale of the same number of shares.

This $654,000 collateral was deposited as $447,000 more than the cost of the stock to Mr. and Mrs. Ewing.

"If these shares are not covered, you and your wife will still be in possession of the money for which the stocks were sold since in 1928, when you sold them," Pecora demanded.

"We have the money now," Ewing said.

"You have never paid any income tax on the sale of the stocks that have never been covered?"

Ewing said the internal revenue bureau had attempted to assess an additional $60,087 against him and $52,328 against his wife on the transaction, but that the board of tax appeals had overruled the bureau, upholding the short sales were a bona fide transaction.

Against Rules.

"Has the Morgan firm a policy on short sales?" Pecora asked.

"Yes," Ewing said. "The partners are not supposed to sell stock short."

Did you depart from that policy when the trust sold 4,350 shares of Johns-Manville Company short?"

No, it was done for the trusts.

The 34-year-old Lamont was the first witness and Morgan took a seat next to Chairman Fletcher to hear him testify. But first the Morgan counsel, John D. Davis, took issue with responsibility for objecting to the same income tax questions last week and said his clients were anxious, as from the beginning, to supply all needed facts.

Lamont read a statement in which he said his 1930 income tax had been examined by internal revenue bureau officials and that he had "received from them no inquiry, criticism or complaint, nor has there been at any time any redetermination of my tax or any request for a further payment."

He added:

"The bureau has said that the time allotted the bureau under the statute to make a redetermination has expired. That doesn't mean anything to me because I don't intend to try and hide my income tax return now or at any time behind a statute of limitation."

Waive Benefit.

"If the bureau wants to make a redetermination of these transactions, I am entirely willing that they should do so and am quite ready to waive any benefit from the lapse of time which the statutes may give."

Lamont's stock sales took place December 30 and 31, 1930, a year in which all the Morgan partners paid only $48,000 in income taxes. He said his public sales were 1,000 shares of Shamrock Oil & Gas, 1,500 Continental Oil, 200 Durium Products and 300 Hall Electric Heating Company.

Sales to his wife were 500 shares of State Street Investment Corporation, 350 Investment Corporation of Philadelphia, 237 P. R. Mallory & Co. and a beneficial interest in 1,000 shares of Simms Petroleum stock.

"My wife purchased in the market a similar amount of the shares sold publicly," he explained. "She purchased them for cash and borrowed an equal amount of money from me upon her demand note which, though not specifically collateralized, was well covered by the shares themselves plus her other personal estate."

Final Disposal.

"I intended the sale to be a complete and final disposal of these shares and she understood it to be so. Dividends on these shares after she bought them were naturally paid to my wife for her own personal account."

"I was advised that under these circumstances I was fully within my rights in deducting from my income tax return for the year 1930 the amount of the loss sustained."

"I purchased the stocks from the Ginn of the city police department."

Miss Dodson died Thursday at an Atlanta hospital of injuries she received when the car in which she was riding with an Atlanta man whose name was not learned overturned several miles below Hapeville in Clayton county. She is said to have a sister residing in Long Island, New York. No death certificate has been signed by the Clayton county coroner and Clayton authorities have not announced what action they will take. Funeral arrangements have not been made.

PERKERSON, DAVIS QUIT BOND BOARD

Resignations May Delay Reinstatement of Five Per Cent Pay Cut.

Resignation of W. T. Perkinson and William J. Davis, two of the three citizen members of the bond sinking fund commission, may cause a delay in reinstatement of 5 per cent of the salary slashes imposed on city employees, despite the fact that Mayor James L. Key approved the June finance sheet, it was seen Friday.

Wiley L. Moore, third citizen member of the commission, who was elected Monday by council, was sworn in and it is expected that two other elections will be made at council's meeting June 19.

Sale of $588,000 in bonds to refund bonds due this year still will be delayed until the entire commission sits. Council leaders Friday were considering nominations. The mayor and city comptroller complete the five-man board.

As Key approved the June budget, he issued a warning to the school department that it must not exceed budget provisions which make it mandatory that 30 per cent be set up for school operation. He was fortified by opinions from City Attorney James L. Mayson and Comptroller R. Graham West that the sheet, if approved, would not allocate more than 30 per cent of the revenue for schools.

'Melon Rich in Vitamin, Minerals, Says Diet Expert of U. of Georgia

MOULTREE, Ga., June 9.—In connection with the Georgia watermelon festival to be held here on June 30, the Hotel Colquhoun and the Chamber of Commerce are preparing to print a folder containing recipes for utilizing the entire watermelon.

It is not generally known that the watermelon is an important source of vitamins A and C. The mineral content of the watermelon are also important from the nutritional standpoint. In this connection Miss Virginia Harrold, assistant professor of foods and nutrition, home economics department, Georgia State College of Agriculture, states that one pound of watermelon contains 137 calories. A one hundred calorie portion of watermelon carries 1.65 shares of calcium, 23 shares of phosphorus and 1.38 shares of iron. A share is 1.30 of the total daily requirements of these minerals.

Miss Harrold says a one hundred calorie portion of watermelon is richer in iron than grapes, grapefruit, oranges or raisins. These base forming minerals of the watermelon, says Miss Harrold, aid in preventing and combating acidosis. This condition of the blood is brought about by a diet of meats, cereals and sweets and is characterized by lack of vim, vigor and vitality.

The water content of the watermelon is also an important item of diet. The body needs an internal bath of six or eight glasses of water daily, but seldom receives it. Miss Harrold refers to the fact that many of the kidney diseases are produced by a continuously low intake of water, causing the cells to become worn out and sensitive from handling concentrated solutions of the body waste materials.

"A part of the daily water requirements, therefore," she says, "in the form of watermelon would certainly not be considered a bad dose of medicine."

The Georgia watermelon festival has for its object a greater consumption of this delicious, tasty Secretary Harris, of the local Chamber of Commerce. With this in view the booklet now in course of preparation will be mailed to all principal hotels and the consuming centers of the north and east. Eventually, it is hoped to double the consumption of the Georgia watermelon by supplying information showing the importance of the watermelon as a source of vitamins and minerals in the food.

Trouble Again

By Robert Franc Schulkers

BEYOND the DOOR
by Carol Brown

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE:

Frederick Von Veb is stabbed to death in his top floor quarters in an old studio building while Brent, head of an art firm; Mathewson, another artist, and Sprague, Von Veb's nephew, chat for three minutes outside his door after leaving him alone. In the clear hand of the statue he has been modeling is a dagger, which Papa Marat, a neighbor in the basement, says he loaned to a pretty model named Virginia. Manning Colby, Mathewson's fourth floor neighbor, says he saw the dagger in the studio beneath Manning's. Then Virginia bounces in from the fire escape. She says she quarreled with Von Veb while posing for him, then went down to the Morgans, but left because of the actions of one of the boys. Manning goes to phone Brent, but won't be ready until Brent already has started. On the stairs old Dan, the janitor, tells Manning Von Veb is dead and starts him by adding, "And you're the man who knows this. Papa Marat, once a roving newspaper correspondent, gets the murder story exclusively and sells it to a morning paper. Later Dan demands $2,000 as the price of his silence for a week, and Manning, in an unreasoning panic, pays him to get time to solve the mystery. Virginia asks Manning if he may see him alone. She convinces him of her innocence. Only leaves for a week at an artists' camp. "The Mole Hill." Manning comes on at Marat in the cellar at night as Papa takes a dagger from the chimney. As they battle in the dark, a woman screams. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT XII.

"What did you do with it?" Manning demanded, his anger mounting. He was not to be cheated! Cheated out of time to analyze the situation. But he had sneaked into the basement expecting to find a clue, and when he had found someone else there he had assumed that it was the murderer. Then Papa Marat pulled the dagger out of the chimney—the yellow cloisonne dagger with the wicked triangular blade that had killed Von Veb. At that women he seemed to see the whole thing—Papa Marat creeping up the stairs from the basement—passing old Dan on the stairway with an understanding look, going out into the fire escape, peering in the window, seeing Sprague and Brent and Mathewson there—waiting until they had departed—then slipping in through the window—hounding over Von Veb. . . . And now he, Manning, had discovered him in his crime and the old man was about to cheat him out of his evidence. "I tell you," he whispered, "give it to me—give it to me! Or I'll . . ."

Aunt Het

Papa Marat beamed like a child who enjoys holding a secret. "This dagger," he said, "was not in the hand of the statue. That dagger is, as you just stated, at headquarters." He waited expectantly for Manning's next question and when it was forthcoming, he replied, "I had two of these daggers—two daggers. I got them, as I said, from an old mandarin, Charming, cultured old fellow—the finest type of aristocratic Chinese. He had an insane ancestor who had these made because . . . Manning heard him out with, "But the blood on the other dagger?" "The old man took his head," he said. "I don't know yet, I will know!" "And when did you lose this one?" "The afternoon of the murder. It was taken from this bracket." He indicated the long line of daggers on the wall and the empty bracket that Manning had noticed the night of the murder. "But who was here in the afternoon?" Manning demanded. "Papa Marat answered thoughtfully, "I don't know exactly. The Morgans were in here early, about 3 o'clock, with some girls. They drank tea—that is officially, tea, as far as I'm supposed to know—until about 5 o'clock. When they got through the place was such a mess I asked Dan to come in to clean it up. He was here working for about half an hour. No one else was in there, so far as I know, until you came."
